

MR. DISCIPLINE

FREE FIELD GUIDE

THE 7-DAY STARTER

THE DISCIPLINE RESET.

Seven days to start a streak that doesn't break — using the exact method behind a daily push-up habit that never misses.

Motivation quits. Discipline doesn't.

BUILD IN SILENCE.

YOU DON'T NEED MOTIVATION.

You need a rep you'll do on the day you feel like nothing.

Every morning and every night, I do push-ups. Not when I feel strong. Not when the video's going to do well. Every single day — because the streak is the point, not the mood.

People think it takes some rare fire. It doesn't. It takes a number small enough that you can't talk yourself out of it, repeated until skipping it feels worse than doing it. That's the whole secret. This guide hands you the method and the first seven days.

2,000 PUSH-UPS / DAY	1,000 MORNING	1,000 NIGHT
--------------------------------	-------------------------	-----------------------

That's not where you start. That's where discipline goes when you stop negotiating with it. Your job this week isn't my number — it's building the mechanism that makes any number inevitable.

READ THIS TWICE

Motivation is a feeling. Feelings leave. Discipline is a decision you already made, so today's version of you doesn't get a vote.

SMALL SETS. ALL DAY.

Nobody builds volume by grinding one brutal set to failure. You build it by doing many easy sets across the day, never near your limit. Your body treats it as practice, not punishment — so you recover fast and you actually come back tomorrow. Here's the entire system.

1

FIND YOUR NUMBER

Day one, do one clean set of push-ups until form breaks — not to collapse. Drop to your knees if you need to. Write that number down. Call it your Baseline. Whether it's 3 or 30 doesn't matter; it's your starting line.

2

NEVER GO PAST HALF

Every working set this week is about half your Baseline, rounded, minimum two reps. It should feel too easy. That's the point — easy sets are repeatable, and repeatable is what builds a streak.

3

SPREAD IT ACROSS THE DAY

Do several small sets — "waves" — through the day instead of all at once. By your desk. Before a meal. Passing a doorway. The volume adds up while barely touching your energy.

4

TWO ANCHORS, EVERY DAY

Tie your reps to two fixed moments — one morning, one night. Same triggers daily. The habit isn't the push-up; it's showing up at the anchor no matter what.

THE RULE THAT MATTERS MOST

Leave every set feeling like you could've done more. Discipline is playing the long game — you're training the habit, not the muscle. The muscle comes free with the reps.

SEVEN DAYS.

Every number below is built off your Baseline (B). One daily discipline action sits beside the reps — that's the part that actually rewires you.

DAY	THE WORK	THE DISCIPLINE
DAY 1	Baseline test. 1 clean set to form-break. Record B.	Do it before you touch your phone.
DAY 2	4 waves × ½B morning + night anchors	Set your two anchor times. Lock them.
DAY 3	5 waves × ½B	No zero days. One rep still counts.
DAY 4	4 waves × ½B lighter — stay consistent	Tell no one. Build in silence.
DAY 5	5 waves × ½B	Do it on the day you least want to.
DAY 6	6 waves × ½B	Stack it onto something you already do daily.
DAY 7	Re-test max. Compare to Day 1.	Decide who you'll be for the next 30.

WORKED EXAMPLE. If your Baseline is 10, then ½B = 5 reps per wave. Day 6 = 6 waves × 5 = 30 reps, done in tiny bites you'll barely notice. Small enough to never skip. That's how 2,000 eventually becomes possible — it starts here, at five.

IF A DAY GOES SIDEWAYS

Missed your window? Do one single push-up before bed. Not to make up volume — to protect the streak. The unbroken chain is worth more than any workout.

THREE RULES.

Keep these past day seven and the habit stops being something you do. It becomes something you are.

01 NEVER A ZERO DAY

Every day gets at least one rep. Sick, slammed, traveling — one push-up keeps the chain alive. The streak is sacred; the volume is negotiable.

02 DON'T BREAK THE CHAIN TWICE

Anyone can have an off day. Champions never miss two in a row. If yesterday slipped, today is non-negotiable — no exceptions, no debate.

03 BUILD IN SILENCE

You don't need an audience to stay disciplined. Do the work when no one's watching and let the results do the announcing. Quiet consistency beats loud intention every time.

THE WHOLE THING IN ONE LINE

Discipline isn't doing it when it's hard. It's doing it when it's boring — long after the motivation that started you has already gone home.

SEVEN DAYS IN. NOW GO 30.

You proved you can show up. JumpStart is where showing up becomes who you are.

JUMPSTART — 30-DAY DISCIPLINE CHALLENGE

DON'T STOP AT A RESET. START A STREAK.

- A 30-day push-up progression that scales from your Baseline
- A daily discipline action that compounds into identity
- A streak tracker built so missing a day actually stings
- The exact system behind 2,000 reps a day, broken into steps you'll finish

START JUMPSTART →